Weathered Oak Herb Farm: Its Herb House and its Gardens

The cover and title page of this little book as well as photographs elsewhere in these pages carry you to a Maryland hillside: Weathered Oak Herb Farm. A hill slope of native woodland: oak, hickory, sycamore, pine, tulip poplar, with dogwood, in the month of May, threading white beauty through this forest background. The Farm's roadway leads upward to more open land: sunny field acres of fragrant herbs and the peace of old fashioned gardens of herbs, framed and enhanced by old English boxwood and Irish yew, whose great age: a century and more of growth and of effort, contributes character; beauty; traditions; with which simple buildings of weathered hand-hewn oak and ancient stone seem in harmony.

What matter if these gardens and buildings, designed and developed by the Landscape Department of Weathered Oak Herb Farm, Inc., date their design and development by only a few years? The roots of their spirit, the worn surface of their texture, the inner strength of their fibre, the half-remembered, haunting fragrance of their leaves and flowers can perhaps sustain their own beauty, creating their own music. And for those of you who are receptive and who understand, perhaps there may be something here to absorb and to enjoy.

Home Grown Herbs

Even though the atmosphere of Weathered Oak Herb Farm is singularly peaceful, hidden away as it is from the traffic and noise of the outside world: nothing visible from the highway, the entrance: a wooded lane, with old rail fencing on either side,—yet within its boundaries there is much activity, many trained workers and a wide range of occupations extending far beyond the usual life of a farm. The ploughed fields are chiefly given over to the growing of herbs and when the crops are harvested,—great basketfuls of fragrant leafage,—they are scientifically dried and carefully prepared for their various uses. A portion of the herbs are blended according to Weathered Oak Herb Farm's own formulas: Herbs for Salads, for Omelets, for Tomato Recipes, for Poultry and Turkey Stuffing, etc., while the balance is put up as single ingredients; the familiar Thyme, Sage, Tarragon, Sweet Marjoram, Basil, etc.—all material placed in tightly closed glass jars, attractively labeled, for in this way the strength of their wholesome, aromatic, “‘vertue’” should last a long time. Simple suggestions for the usage of herbs are contained in a little book recently published by Weathered Oak Herb Farm, Inc.: “‘Receipts in Herb Cookery,’” at twenty-five cents per copy. For a complete list and prices of Dried Culinary Herbs see page 9.

Herbal Teas or Tisanes

In 1770 there were in our Colonies, "herb tea" and "store tea": dried leaves, bark, roots or flowers of at least fifty herbs and shrubs or trees made hot, aromatic drinks for the Patriots.

HELEN NOYES WEBSTER.

The herbs chosen in the early days for use as teas included the fresh or dried leaves of Oswego Tea (bee balm), sage, catnip, dandelion, costmary, lemon balm, yarrow, wintergreen, lemon thyme, chamomile, peppermint, etc. Weathered Oak Herb Farm, Inc. offers the following Herbal Teas as those most in use today:

The Dried Culinary Herbs

The skillful touch that makes any good dish just that much better. HERBS, whether the fresh leaves from the garden or the dried, are not like strong condiments or Eastern spices. They are an added bit of leafage from some aromatic wholesome plant or a blend of several, that gives a subtle flavor, well-chosen, for that particular type of food. Delightful for Soups, Salads, Stews, Entrees, Sauces, Poultry Basting, Poultry Stuffing, Tomato Receipts, Omelets, etc.

Transplanting for Gardens of Unusual Character and Beauty

No trouble is counted too great in securing plant material that is truly worthwhile.

For example: here at Weathered Oak Herb Farm may be found an outstanding collection of Old English Boxwood; Irish Yew, which have dramatically towered for a century; Holly; Magnolia.

The two photographs of Irish Yew indicate the character of some of the rare trees and method of handling employed by the Landscape Department of Weathered Oak Herb Farm, Inc.
